

KEEP YOUR COOL IN THE HEAT

Hot weather can place a dangerous strain on your body, especially on your heart. Heat stress can cause many medical problems. Taking a few precautionary steps against heat stress and learning what resources will be available in the event of a heat wave can mean a more comfortable and safer summer.

Temperatures above 90 degrees, especially when combined with high humidity place a strain on your body. Your chances of getting sick in hot weather are increased by a weak or damaged heart, hypertension, circulatory problems, diabetes, a previous stroke, infection or fever, diarrhea, alcohol consumption, skin disease or sunburn, or being overweight.

Certain prescription drugs can make you much more vulnerable to the heat. If you take medicine for high blood pressure, nervousness, depression, poor circulation or sleeping check with your doctor or pharmacist for advice.

During hot weather, most people feel uncomfortable, and may notice a lack of energy or loss of appetite. These are mild signs, and unless they last a long time, there is no need to be alarmed. Take steps to cool down and you avoid more serious affects of the heat.

However, if you or someone you know experiences any of the following serious signs, bathe with cool water and seek medical advice immediately: dizziness, rapid heartbeat, diarrhea, nausea, throbbing headache, dry skin (no sweating), chest pain, great weakness, and mental changes, breathing problems or cramps.

The Cambridge Council on Aging will serve as the main number for individuals to call for information and assistance in the event of a heat emergency. A staff person will provide information on preventive steps to avoid heat stress and coordinate with available community resources to link you with the assistance you need.
