Dear Committee Members:

We are tenant representatives from affordable housing owned and operated by the Cambridge Housing Authority (CHA) and its affiliated non-profits. We are writing to ask your continued support for an 80% allocation of CPA funding for affordable housing initiatives in the City of Cambridge. The need to preserve affordable housing in the City and well as to produce new affordable units has never been more critical. The CHA's waiting lists currently total over 9,000 households and market housing in the City continues to be out of the reach of ALL low and moderate income households. We encourage the City to continue their support for both preservation and production of affordable housing and seek your commitment to devote 80% of CPA funds to this critical effort.

Thank you,

Petitioning Eliot Community Human Services; Homeless Services Planning Committee (HSPC), City of Cambridge Continuum of Care; and the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD):

Restore funding to Bread & Jams so that the program can continue to provide invaluable outreach in Cambridge, Massachusetts

Bread & Jams Self Advocacy Center is a low threshold program that has offered a safe place off the street for over 25 years in Cambridge, MA. The program, despite its small staff and space requirements, has enormous impact on its individual users. Bread & Jams provides care to, on average, 55 people per day. Bread & Jams provides access to meals, clothes, mail delivery, and case management, as well as help with housing search, job search, and benefits including Social Security, Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits, health insurance, and providing referrals when necessary. The planned closure of Bread & Jams on March 25, 2014 due to budget cuts will disrupt the flow of integrated services to many individuals, as well as will have unforeseen impact on the greater Cambridge community.

HISTORY

Bread & Jams Self Advocacy Center was an adult day center located in the basement of the Swedenborg Chapel on the corner of Quincy St and Kirkland in Cambridge. Founded in 1989 by homeless musicians and Harvard students, "Bnjs" has offered a safe place off the street for over 25 years in Cambridge, MA.

Bnjs served two square meals, and provided counseling services to the homeless and most vulnerable adult population in the Cambridge area. Around six years ago, Bnjs teamed up under Eliot Community Health Services, a non-profit organization with 1,500 staff.

CURRENT STATUS

The US Housing and Urban Development (HUD) declared that "supportive street services" such as Bnjs would not be guaranteed funding for 2014. As Eliot has no federal guaranteed funding for Bnjs, they did not renew the lease to the Swedenborg Chapel. Bread and Jams can no longer pay its rent, staff, or the cost of running the program. The last day of service was March 25, 2014.

SERVICES

Bread & Jams provided care to an average of 55 people per day. Bread & Jams provided delicious meals donated from a local international school, clothes, mail delivery, and case management, as well as help with housing search, job search, and benefits including Social Security, Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits, health insurance, and providing referrals when necessary.

POPULATION

Most of Bread & Jams clients were homeless or recently homeless. As most shelters require clients to leave in the morning and return at night, Bread & Jams provided a caring place for diverse individuals during the day. Many clients have been attending for many years, even some individuals who have risen out of homelessness. Bnjs provided was a bridge, where people along a continuum of care could access what they needed.

A Culture of Care

THE BREAD & JAMS DIFFERENCE

Bread & Jams was a stable place for many individuals: a bridge to get people out of homelessness. It was a “low-threshold program,” not requiring justification, referrals, or being categorized into a certain service group, such as “women,” “youth,” “sober,” or “veteran.”

The caring atmosphere thus met many people’s needs, and also enabled sharing of resources between clients. Due to the diversity of its members, from those who are homeless, to recently housed, to working individuals, BnJs created a “vertical learning opportunity” of mutual support and respect. The space provided a safe common ground where people share news, stories and services.

There is currently no clear substitute to fill the service gap—and the void will impact the well-being of all of us in the Cambridge community.

BREAD AND JAMS

Shelter closes after cuts

Community rallies to reopen nonprofit

By Marc Filippino
mfilippino@wickedlocal.com

City officials and members of the community are looking feverishly to fund the recently closed homeless shelter Bread and Jams.

Bread and Jams was located at 50 Quincy St., in the basement of the Swedenborg Chapel, before closing up on March 25. The nonprofit serviced more than 200 clients annually to create a safe drop-in environment where they could get rest, obtain food and enjoy a social environment.

Operated by Eliot Community Human Services, Bread and Jams closed due to a change in its Housing Urban Development (HUD) funding, which makes up 50 percent of the nonprofit's backing. The only other source of money Bread and Jams receives is through fundraising.

Before this year's classification, Bread and Jams was labeled as a Tier 1 Permanent Housing program, which almost guaranteed Bread and James funding. This year, the homeless shelter will be classified as a Tier 2 Permanent Housing program, which means it will be less of a priority in terms of funding from the state.

SHELTER

In the past several years, funding from HUD has declined consistently at the federal level. This year, President Barack Obama's proposal would increase HUD by nearly $1.2 billion from what Congress approved for the fiscal 2014 budget.

Caroline James, a student at Harvard University's Graduate School of Design, first noticed the Bread and Jams four years ago as she walked by the entrance of the Swedenborg Church basement. Now she and other members of the Harvard Square community are looking at ways to possibly resurrect the shelter.

"The space was like a hug," James said.

The volunteer-run Bread and Jams operates on a $160,000 budget, which was taken under Eliot Community Human Services' wing around six years ago, James said. Most of the money is used to pay rent and housing expenses.

James found out about two months ago that Bread and Jams was closing and, in response, helped form a committee of concerned citizens and stakeholders.

Additionally, Gabriel Paci, a member of Eliot's Board of Directors, said he is working to find alternative funding and see if it can move itself back up to HUD's Tier 1 funding list.

"It's a vital organization that serves a huge purpose in Harvard Square," Paci said. "It keeps the homeless in a social environment and it helps keep them away from organizations and businesses in the square."

"With that in mind, the Harvard Square Business Association could offer to help us out," Paci added.

Councilors Marc McGovern and Nadeem Mazen are holding meetings to listen to concerned citizens and help establish a short-term solution in order to get the organization immediately back on its feet. The councilors are also pointing the brainstorming session in a direction that could offer a longer-term solution for Bread and Jams.

"The long-term questions are around funding and at HUD," said McGovern. "We're working on finding a more stable revenue source so they can continue longer."

McGovern plans on meeting with members of Eliot Community Human Services and possibly local universities to help temporarily house the shelter.
