NEW BUSINESS/ UPDATES

FY 2010 Income Limits

Staff presented a request to amend the methodology used to set 80% AMI income limits for units developed under Inclusionary Zoning. Rather than use the HUD-specified 80% AMI figures which are artificially capped by a national standard, staff proposed using the calculated 80% AMI based on HUD’s 100% AMI income limit figures. While all other income limits are calculated from the actual 100% AMI figures, HUD caps the 80% AMI figure using its own methodology based on a national standard. As a result, 80% AMI in Cambridge has historically been set below the actual calculated 80% AMI. This year, for the first time, HUD has actually decreased its 80% AMI limits so that now the 2010 HUD 80% AMI limits for the Boston-Cambridge-Quincy SMSA are approximately 70.3% of actual AMI.

The result is that households who earn between 70.3% - 80%AMI will not be eligible for many of our housing programs. In order to continue to serve the greatest number of households needing assistance, staff proposed using the actual calculated 80% figures for rental and ownership units created under Inclusionary Zoning. The new HUD FY2010 income limits must be used for all of our state and federally-funded housing, including buyers receiving down-payment assistance. However, the Trust has flexibility in setting the income limits for the Inclusionary units.

Upon a motion moved and seconded, it was: Voted to approve amending the methodology used to calculate 80% AMI for units created under Section 11.200, Inclusionary Zoning, to 80% of 100% AMI, as described above and in the Trust’s briefing materials.
