Temple Place

Mr. Stockard recused himself from discussion and left the room at 4:21.

Staff presented changes in the design for Temple Place Project. Since the construction bids came in higher than expected in September 2012, the CAHC has been exploring ways to make the project financially feasible. A successful redesign has been found.

The changes from the original design included a slight reduction in the number of units from 42 to 40, but an increase in the number of family sized units. This was accomplished by recapturing some common space and somewhat reducing the size of the units.

Additional savings were found by reducing the building from seven stories to five stories. This height reduction eliminated the requirement of steel construction for high rise buildings, thus, the revised design calls for wood framing. The size of the building was reduced by approximately 13,000 square feet. The original plan called for underground parking; the new plan has surface parking. Furthermore, the building exterior is simplified, by eliminating or scaling back the bay windows and decorative features. The exterior has been changed from metal based material to a cement based siding.

The zoning relief required for the redesigned building is less than the Board of Zoning Appeal approved in the original permit. CAHC is communicating with abutters and the CAHC will bring this insubstantial change to the BZA in February. If the BZA approves the changes, CAHC will develop a new bid package and prequalify contractors.

Even with these cost reductions and retention of most of the committed financing, CAHC anticipates that there will be a request to the Trust to fill a funding gap. Construction costs, which were competitive, have risen; tax credit yields are now assumed to be slightly lower than in September; and delays in the project have been costly. The Trust discussed ways to fill the gap. Staff will work with CAHC to reduce their anticipated request.

Jim Stockard returned at 4:49.
