Equity Wellness Workshops

The Women's Commission hosted three Radical Wellness sessions for Cambridge employees in September and October – nearly 60 employees signed up for the Zoom sessions. In these sessions, wellness as part of a systems context was explored. Wellness is an upstream challenge – struggling is not our fault as individuals; we are part of a system that does not prioritize wellbeing. Now the question is, how do we put what learned into practice for the City in general? How do we codify wellness into policy?

The sessions were facilitated by Adyna Wellness, a company co-founded by three Jamaican-born, Cambridge-raised sisters with a love for helping others and creating safe spaces, offering a spectrum of services designed to empower individuals to achieve balanced, harmonious, and healthier lives.

New Commissioner Update

The Women's Commission drafted a FAQ document to be included when posting for new commissioners. The FAQ doc will be shared with current commissioners. This will help clarify what it means to be on the Commission and as well as set clear expectations. Posting is expected October 24.

Women in Cambridge

Barbara presented how the commission hosted 17 WiC events between 2017 and 2018 when she was involved. The MeetUp currently has 1200+ members, but we don't know who they are.

We will survey members to find out how they would like to meet, how often, and what topics they would like to see covered.

Barbara will reach out to Cambridge Local First to see what type of events they are currently offering for women. We will also reach out to CDD about their programming for women in business.
