Healthy Parks and Playgrounds

A new old way to think about play and public space

Elm & Hampshire Plaza
February, 2014
Why does the city care about play and the public realm?

We dedicate space for play because it is a public good. Play is important to the health and development of individuals and the community at large.

Public play shows how a community values imagination and creativity. Play invites participation from all segments of the community.
How should we plan for play?

Play is NOT

- Just for little kids
- Just burning calories
- Just wasting time
- Just for playgrounds
Start at the beginning – What is Play?

How is play healthy?

• Part of human development
• Part of public life
Play is an integral part of human nature

- Play happens everywhere
- Play happens all the time
- Play is for everyone (kids are just better at it!)
Play is free, often unstructured and can be messy

• Play is a process, an activity
• Purposeful, but not a means to an end
• Self-directed
• Participatory
• Improvisational
Play is fun and makes people happy

- Emotional health and well-being
- Lifelong benefits
Play is a self-directed learning process, self-initiated

- Active thinking
- Players make their own rules
- Independent learning
- Applied knowledge
- Testing ideas
- Following ideas to conclusions
Play is exploratory, creative and imaginative

• Exploring the unknown
• Building new things
• Storytelling
• Not unlike the process of artists, innovators
Play is physical, experimental, challenging and sometimes risky

- Uses energy
- Improves circulation, reduces stress
- Coordination, balance and motor skills
- Thinking and movement
Play is learning about the outside world

- Natural and urban
- Using all senses
- How objects and materials interact
- Manipulating materials, objects
- Plants, soils, sand, water
- Fresh air, sunshine, greenery
Play can be solitary or social

- Sharing
- Communication
- Cooperation
- Competition
- Trust

- Reflection
- Introspection
- Independence
Parks and playgrounds should be integrated play environments, not just collections of play features in an enclosed area.
Meaningful play opportunities should be available to all levels of ability and ages.

Play opportunities should be provided during all seasons of the year and all weather conditions.
Beyond Parks and Playgrounds

- Inviting play throughout the public realm
- Inviting all ages to participate
Vision for the Future

Parks and Playgrounds
- Different parks for different needs – one size does NOT fit all!
- More focus on “environment” than “equipment”

The Public Realm (e.g., Sidewalks, Plazas)
- Playfulness and whimsy in unexpected places
- Spaces for imaginative interaction
- Spaces for socializing, community
www.cambridgema.gov/healthyplaygrounds