Cambridge Commission for Persons with Disabilities

Documentary Film La Casa Linda Premieres in Cambridge November 7th at 2 pm

Living in the village of Chimayo, New Mexico, Linda Pedro became a pioneer in independent living for people with disabilities, and much more -- an advocate for disability rights, a fearless politician, an artist, and a leader who became the rock in her community.

Several decades ago, as a fledgling legal services attorney, Fred Woods represented Linda --who was paralyzed as the result of an auto accident -- in what started out as a custody case and ended up as a landmark in disabilities law. Now a documentary filmmaker and Cambridge resident, Woods started shooting a documentary about Pedro, La Casa Linda, almost seven years ago. "She was the most remarkable person I've ever known," said Woods.

"Linda died this past January at the age of 68. I'll remember her as generous friend who lived out her deepest values, never shied from the truth, and was a wonderful story teller," said Woods. "The film... is her story, told, for the most part, by Linda. It may change the way we think about disability, and about the traditions that define us as Americans."

Because Accessibility and Fashion Don't Have to Be Mutually Exclusive!

Co-founded by Grace Teo and Alice Tin, Open Style Lab (OSL) is a nonprofit organization run out of MIT's International Design Center with a mission of making style accessible to people of all abilities (see "MIT Open Style Lab Students Design Assistive Clothing" in the September-October, 2014 issue of AccessLetter, online at bit.ly/CCPDAccessLetter).

It is specifically focused on clothing accessibility, holding a summer program connecting engineers, occupational therapists (OTs) and fashion designers (OSL Fellows) with clients with disabilities who have a need for functional clothing.

Historically, the focus on disability has stemmed from the medical model, which emphasizes "curing" individuals, and considers disability the barrier to independence and societal inclusion. This attitude has a tendency of marginalizing the disability community by believing that people with disabilities (PWD) need to be "fixed" in order to fit societal norms and achieve inclusion, rather than encouraging inclusionary practices, such as universal design, to afford them inclusion as they are.

In contrast, the social model of disability considers society to be a primary factor in disabling people. Under this model, the removal of barriers—physical, attitudinal, communicative and other forms of exclusion—is considered vital in improving the quality of life for individuals with disabilities. OSL is an innovative approach to moving away from the medical model. Although assistive technology is becoming more mainstream, many devices intended to help PWD function more independently remain medicalized and certainly not fashionable. With teams comprised of experts from three entirely different fields—engineering, OT, and fashion design, OSL successfully integrates accessibility with fashion.

This summer, 24 Fellows – eight from each of the three fields – were split into interdisciplinary teams of three. Each team was matched with a client, with whom they met periodically over the 10-week course.

In addition to weekly lectures and mentorship by experts in fields such as fashion design, prosthetics, intellectual property, assistive wearables, occupational therapy, the teams spent time getting to know their clients, learning about their needs as well as style preferences and developed a series of prototypes with the goal of ultimately providing the clothing solutions their clients desired. The program wrapped up on August 15 with the second annual Final Showcase, held at the MIT Museum. This article will give you a sampler of the products that were developed.

The Duet was developed for Heidi, a woman who uses a wheelchair and has limited use of her arms. She expressed difficulty in independently donning and doffing pants, making toileting, particularly in public restrooms, very hard. Her team developed the Duet, which is a comfortable and stylish pair of pants with attached underwear that can be unzipped from the sides. Their client reported that it took her 30 minutes to independently toilet in public restrooms with regular pants and that the Duet reduced the time needed by 75%, requiring far less energy consumption.

Team Theo demonstrates Dry Night Pajamas at Open Style Lab event

EduCap is protective headgear that was developed for the staff of the New England Center for Children (NECC), a school for children with autism, some of whom exhibit aggressive behavior on occasion. Staff members were incurring injuries, including concussions, at times when they intervened. In addition to providing head protection, their product needed to appear non-threatening to children, be comfortable enough to wear for several hours at a time, and fit in with the aesthetics of the educational setting. The team's final design, EduCap, acts like a baseball helmet, but has the appearance of a baseball cap. In addition, the bill is magnetically attached to the cap, so that it simply comes off in instances where a child grabs it. Furthermore, to prevent hair pulling, a hidden pouch was sewed into the back of the cap to hold long hair. After receiving an enthusiastic response towards and lots of interest in it, the creators of EduCap are now looking into making their product more widely available.

The Dry Night Pajamas were created for Theo, a 10 year old boy who uses a catheter and was having problems with leakage at night. His team created a single piece pair of pajamas by adding a pocket over the front lower abdomen portion of a wrestling singlet. The pocket, which bears the Patriots logo, can hold either a Zorb pad or an overnight catheter bag, each a method for preventing leakage. They designed the pajamas to look like athletic gear so Theo would be comfortable wearing them at sleep overs.

Katherine is a client with a connective tissue disorder that affects her vascular system and joints, causing chronic pain and dislocations. While she does not experience any challenge in dressing herself, she has a hard time holding her head up unassisted for long periods of time. She has tried a variety of neck braces, but found them to be bulky and hot, and was growing tired of questions from well-meaning friends and colleagues asking what was wrong. She asked her team to design a non-medicalized product that would be both fashionable and functional. Enter Heads-Up, a head scarf with suspender straps that fasten to her belt, easing the load on her neck via the suspender pulling system. Katherine's team even matched the color and a similar design element of her beloved service dog's collar!

Each team of fellows kept a blog documenting the design process from beginning to end (see www.openstylelab.org). NECC's team summed up the culmination of their hard work quite nicely: "[The Final Showcase] was a chance to tell a large group of people just how proud we were of our product. It was a chance to explain it in detail to people who were truly interested. We were able to see our OSL fellows succeed and proudly explain their processes and products as well. And, perhaps most importantly, we saw many satisfied clients watching their solutions come to life in front of them. Most notably, I remember turning to watch the audience for a moment during Team Katherine's presentation and seeing their client, Katherine, smiling. The team members were describing not only how their product would help Katherine but how the design elements that were incorporated into it reflected who Katherine is as a person: an enthusiastic dog lover. I couldn't remember the last time I had seen someone with such a big smile. It was that smile that justified 10 weeks of grueling work."

As a resident of her small village in northern New Mexico, Pedro immersed herself in her Hispanic heritage and in Native American ways to become a spiritual mentor and a political leader who challenged the corrupt local power structure. When drugs threatened to overwhelm her village she faced her greatest challenge as she turned to the community's oldest traditions to lead a campaign for renewal.

Woods has been an attorney, political consultant and film and video producer. Two of his television spots have won Best of Broadcasting awards from the New England Broadcasting Association and his short-form historical documentaries have been incorporated into exhibits by the National Park Service.

The first East Coast showing of La Casa Linda will be at the Cambridge Public Library, 449 Broadway on Saturday, November 7, at 2:00pm. This free event is sponsored by the Cambridge Commission for Persons with Disabilities and the Boston Mayor's Commission for Persons with Disabilities, as part of "Disability Reframed: A Community Film Series."

Following the screening, there will be an audience discussion panel with the filmmaker and Robyn Powell, internationally recognized authority on the rights of parents with disabilities and their families. We hope to see you there.

Vera Study Seeks Assault Survivors

Are you a person with a disability or a Deaf person who is 18 or older? Have you experienced a sexual assault or been forced to do a sexual act when you did not want to or have had a sexual act done to you when you did not want to after you were 15 years old?

You could be eligible to take part in a study about what happens after an assault, including people's experiences of asking for help.

We will be conducting interviews at accessible locations in Boston. Accommodations will be provided, including qualified ASL interpreters. All participants will be compensated $40 to thank them for their time. All information you share with us will be strictly confidential.

What we learn from you may help others!

For more information or to schedule an interview, please call, text, or email Beth at (508) 717-1784 or e.beatriz@neu.edu.

Upcoming Events of Interest to the Disability Community (See end of Calendar for all weekly and recurring events)

- Oct. 2 Artist Talk and Reception: Shades of Inclusion – Hosted by the Open Door Gallery at VSA Massachusetts (89 South Street in Boston), Artist Leaders from Arts Connect International unpack what inclusion means to each of them through their respective work. The show beckons the viewer to interact with the nebulous term of inclusion, asking each of us to examine our own inclusionary bias, opening the term for critique, investigation and building. Above all, the exhibit is a celebration of the diversity found in our local and international communities, utilizing art as a catalyst for multi-dimensional conversations on inclusion. This free event will be held from 6-10pm and requires registration. For more information or to register, visit www.vsamass.org/gallery, email jon@vsamass.org or call 617.350.7713 (voice) or 617.350.6535 (tty).
- Oct. 3 Open Captioned (OC) Performance of Rodgers + Hammerstein's CINDERELLA – OC will be provided at this 2pm performance at the Boston Opera House. Tickets start at $44 and may be purchased online, at the Boston Opera House Box Office (539 Washington Street in Boston) or by phone at 617.880.2419. Be sure to request OC seating. For more information or to purchase tickets online, visit http://boston.broadway.com/accessible_services/. For information on the musical, click on the "Shows" tab.
- Oct. 3 Depression and Neurotherapeutics: A free educational program exclusively for patients, families, and friends – Presented by MGH, this free symposium is designed exclusively for patients, families and friends and will introduce several novel treatments for depression, with a focus on device-based technologies for difficult to treat symptoms and treatment-resistant depression. The goal is to provide a knowledge base for patients seeking or currently receiving psychiatric treatment, and also for their loved ones. Experts from the MGH Dept. of Psychiatry will provide an overview of depression followed by a series of talks focused on specific treatment modalities. We will cover the use of noninvasive techniques such as Transcranial Magnetic Stimulation, convulsive treatments such as Electroconvulsive Therapy, and surgical neuromodulation such as Deep Brain Stimulation. Finally, we will discuss the use of Ketamine as a novel indication for the treatment of depression. The symposium will also include presentations by members of a patient and family panel who will give a first-hand account of their journey through the recovery process and engage in a dialogue with participants, followed by a 15 minute question and answer session. Complimentary coffee, tea, and lunch will be served. This program will be held in the Starr Center Auditorium, Charles River Plaza, 185 Cambridge Street, 2nd floor in Boston from 10am-3:45pm. For more information or to register, visit http://www.massgeneral.org/psychiatry/about/pe_neuro_program2015.aspx, call 866.644.7792 or email educationprogram@partners.org.

- Oct. 4 Audio Described (AD) Performance of Rodgers + Hammerstein's CINDERELLA – AD will be provided at this 1pm performance at the Boston Opera House. Be sure to request AD when purchasing tickets. See Oct. 3 listing for the remaining details.
- Oct. 8 Cambridge Commission for Persons with Disabilities (CCPD) Monthly Meeting – meets in the 2nd floor Conference Room at 51 Inman Street from 5:30-7pm with opportunity for public comment. - Oct. 12 Boston Children's Museum Morningstar Access –Morningstar Access offers children with special needs/medical needs the opportunity to visit the Museum from 8-10am, a time when there are only a few other visitors. At these times, there is a limit of 100 guests, so children and their families can explore the Museum with less concern about infections and large crowds. Fee is $8 per person (half-priced admission; free for members) and registration is required. For more information or to register, visit www.bostonchildrensmuseum.org/morningstar or email Saki Iwamoto, Health and Wellness Educator at Iwamoto@BostonChildrensMuseum.org or call 617.986.3697.
- Oct. 13 Celebration of International White Cane Day – Come celebrate the independence of white canes and help raise public awareness of the White Cane Law, which requires motorists to come to a complete stop when they see a pedestrian using a guide dog or white cane at a street crossing. This celebration will be held in the Grand Hall of the State House from 10 to noon. For more information, contact the Orientation and Mobility Department at the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind at 617.626.7581 or 800.392.6450, extension 626.7581.
- Oct. 15 Access . . . It's Not As Scary as You Think! – Many museums, historic sites, and other cultural organizations are just starting to understand the necessity of access within their institutions. This introduction will include an exploration of myths and realities surrounding people with disabilities and will strengthen your comfort level enabling you to better serve this audience. An overview of access services, practical tips, scenarios, and legalities of the Americans with Disabilities Act will arm you with tools to make it work! This workshop will be held at 10am at the Peabody Essex Museum (www.pem.org), 161 Essex Street in Salem. Participants will be welcome to continue networking with colleagues and enjoy the museum after the workshop. Pre-registration is required at www.ca-ne.org. A $10 donation is requested to cover the costs and materials for the training. For American Sign Language or other accommodations please contact Iwamoto@BostonChildrensMuseum.org by October 8, 2015.
- Oct. 17 "Rethink Challenging Kids" Think:Kids Conference – Think:Kids is a program in the Department of Psychiatry at MGH and was originally known as The Collaborative Problem Solving (CPS) Institute. It was established to use the CPS approach to understanding and helping challenging children and adolescents that was described originally by Dr. Ross Greene in his book, The Explosive Child, and Dr. Greene and Dr. Stuart Ablon's book Treating Explosive Kids: The Collaborative Problem Solving Approach. This event is their first annual conference for parents and professionals and will be held at the Microsoft NERD Center, 1 Memorial Drive in Cambridge from 9am-5pm. Registration fees start at $179 per person. For more information, including the day's agenda, and to register, visit www.thinkkids.org, email info@thinkkids.org or call 617.643.6030
